It was a trip I'll never forget. My little daughter Lizzy turned five and we decided to take her out on ~~the~~ a picnic. 'Come on, Jeff' said my wife, Claire, 'It's going to be the trip of the world'. Her brown eyes were shining brightly and a warm smile made me feel happy, so soon we packed our earnings and <sup>Lex</sup> took off.

There were loads of clouds in the sky and it was challenging to drive. No sooner had we turned to the forest, that I heard the bizarre noise in the car engine. My face expression suddenly became confused and it didn't escape Claire's eyes. No matter how hard I tried to assure her everything was fine, both my wife and daughter seemed to be extremely nervous. So did I, to be honest. <sup>of Lex</sup>

Suddenly, the control pannel turned off and <sup>the</sup> car stopped in the <sup>B.</sup> middle of the road. It came as a huge surprise for me, so <sup>B.</sup> I was rather bewildering. Having got out of the car, I looked for the drawbacks and realised the engine had broken down. Being too ignorant to fix it, I told my girls to get out and set a picnic just where we'd stopped. 'At least, we spend our time together' said Claire then.

Eventually, we took the blankets out of the car and spent hours, listening to Lizzy's stories. Her blue eyes were so happy and naive, that I couldn't help smiling. At last, we called for an evacuator in the late evening, having ~~not~~ missed the spent hours. We were the ~~most~~ happiest people in the world.
