Introduction

Nowadays technological progress gives an enormous number of various options of avoiding boredom and spending your free time. Just a smartphone in your hand may take you on an amazing journey through global network.

Surprisingly, visiting museums and art galleries continue to be one of the most popular ways of entertainment. Tourism is flourishing, students and people who enjoy fine art and science still like going there. However, has the number of attendance changed a lot? That's the aim of my report.

Summarizing and comparing data

I've selected and analysed the attendance data from several museums and galleries in England through separate years. Starting off 2013, the highest rate of attendance was in Science Museum - for about 3.8 mln. The lowest one was in Tate Gallery - 0.9 mln. Tate Gallery's data has increased respectively - by year 2017 number of attendance was 2.2 mln. Other popular museums, like British Museum and National Gallery have also drawn on their rate: people become more and more interested in those places every year. Unfortunately, Science Museum and Natural History Museum appeared to have introduced admission charges in 2014. That's why their attendance data lowered: while having 4 mln visitors in 2013, by 2017 this number was about 2 mln people.

Recommendations

Analysing the results of my study I highlighted the key factors which influence a lot on an attendance number. First, and the main one, is the admission charge.
