Attendance of museums and galleries.

In the past few years there has been an uncertainty with visits to national museums and galleries in England. ~~I am going to~~ <sup>will now</sup> report on the cause of it.

To start with, the British Museum had an attendance of around 2.6 million in 2013. By 2015 there has been a huge leap in people visiting the museum almost doubling the numbers. However, to this day there was no substantial growth and the museum had reached its peak of 5.6 mln people in 2019. Tate Gallery followed the same route. In 2013 the wholesome attendance had reached 0.9 mln. With the addition of new specimen in 2014, by 2015 the total amount of people visiting had increased by ~~the~~ more than a hundred percent. Not much has been done since but the numbers seem to be growing at a slow rate reaching 2.2 mln in 2017.

As for the not so successful ones, the Natural History Museum and the Science Museum were ~~the~~ extremely popular. In 2013, each with a peak of 3.7 and 3.8 mln unique people respectively. In 2014 it was decided to charge for admission and it would seem that the price did not appeal to people as they both ~~are~~ <sup>reach</sup> only below 2 mln now.

Although, there is a solution to this, I suggest both museums either lowered their pricing or bring in new specimen to the collection. This is surely to draw in more people.

Taking everything into consideration, regular updates to the collection and reasonable admission fees are vital in successful museum management.
